Retirements

Mary Glick will retire in September after nine years as Journalism Department chair. Glick raised the department’s profile with community engagement, including the 100th anniversary of Mustang News and the 50th anniversary of KCPR. Glick helped develop a minor in integrated marketing communication, designing two courses: Media, Self and Society; and Media Innovation and Entrepreneurship. She also engaged the Journalism Advisory Board in establishing an endowment for departmental enrichment, including the Jim Hayes Symposium, a program to advance integrity in journalism and communication. Glick came to Cal Poly following 12 years as associate director of American Press Institute, where she facilitated seminars for newspaper executives during a time of industry upheaval. Prior to API, Glick designed and directed an interdisciplinary journalism program at SUNY Oswego and worked as a journalism instructor at Cal State Long Beach in the 1990s. Before her work in education, Glick had a career as a journalist and public relations professional in Southern California. Glick plans to continue teaching and serve part time in the Faculty Early Retirement Program. Brady Teufel will succeed her as department chair.

In Memoriam

Professor emeritus in biological sciences and former associate dean of the College of Science and Mathematics Harry L. Fierstine passed away on April 22, 2021. He was 88. Fierstine taught biology, zoology, comparative anatomy and ichthyology at Cal Poly for 29 years. An innovative teacher, Fierstine was a leader in the anatomy program, always ensuring that students had access to cadavers, an unusual opportunity for undergraduates. Fierstine received Cal Poly’s Distinguished Teaching Award in 1977. In the 1970s, Fierstine visited most of the medical, dental and veterinary schools in California to promote Cal Poly students as competitive applicants to the health professions. Back on campus, he developed the Health Professions Advising group to help students with the application process and provide mock interviews and recommendation letters. His legacy can be seen in the universitywide Pre-Health Career Advising services available to students today. An active scholar, Fierstine published frequently even after retirement. His research focused on the osteology and paleontology of billfish. He and his wife, Arline, were a fixture at seminars and master's thesis defenses in the Biological Sciences Department, continuing to attend after Fierstine received emeritus status. His commitment to science extended into the local community, where he cofounded the Central Coast Biological Society. Fierstine was also a dedicated husband, father and brother. A service is being planned for September. Email kamster1200@gmail to be notified when details are available.
