English Professor to Explain ChatGPT's Limitations and Teaching Potential

While the artificial intelligence (AI) chatbot ChatGPT has caused disruption and concern in many educational and professional settings across the nation, Associate Professor Jason Peters, coordinator of the English Department's first-year composition program, said the program is only as good as its user — at least for now. As an expert in composition and linguistics, Peters has been experimenting with the program since its November 2022 release. Peters will speak on the topic March 23 at Good Morning SLO, the San Luis Obispo Chamber of Commerce's monthly morning breakfast program. The hybrid event is open to the public and will be held from 7:30-9 a.m. at Grace Central Coast Church, 1350 Osos St., in San Luis Obispo and streamed on Zoom. Find Temporary Kennedy Library Locations During Transformation Project

Cal Poly has announced the temporary locations for its library services and study spaces while the Kennedy Library building closes for a planned two-year transformation project. The building is scheduled to close for renovation in summer 2023, with reopening slated for fall 2025. While the library building is closed, services and programs will continue in other locations on campus. Built in 1980, Kennedy Library is over 40 years old and needs significant system upgrades. To ensure the safety of the campus community and construction partners, the building will be closed during the entirety of construction. The library renovation team, working closely with partners from across the university, has identified service and student study hub locations. Tools will be available to help community members quickly find the resources they need throughout the construction. Students Advance to CSU Research Competition

Ten research projects were selected to represent Cal Poly at the 37th annual CSU Student Research Competition, a systemwide event, hosted by San Diego State University on April 28-29. "It is exciting to see how students, faculty and staff are making a difference in their disciplines and our world with their research, scholarship and creative activities," said Jane Lehr, director of the Office of Student Research.
