Week No. 3 of National Cybersecurity Awareness Month focuses on recognizing phishing and how to report it. Phishing poses a threat to Cal Poly, with scammers attempting to deceive recipients via email by pretending to be a trusted company, professor, friend or from the university itself. Protect yourself by looking out for these:

- Does it contain offers too good to be true?
- Is it poorly written with poor grammar and spelling?
- Does it request personal information?
- Does the sender's email address match the company where the email is coming from?

If you spot a phishing email, immediately forward it to abuse@calpoly.edu.
