Lynda and Stewart Resnick Student Success Center Project Announced

Philanthropists and entrepreneurs Lynda and Stewart Resnick have donated $20 million for the Student Success Center, a transformational new facility aimed at expanding the career and personal development opportunities available to students. Named after the Resnicks, co-founders of The Wonderful Co., the center honors their $20 million lead gift supporting the facility and their long-standing commitment for quality education. The 25,000-square-foot Lynda and Stewart Resnick Student Success Center will feature a professional development center for career services, programs that support Cal Poly's growing numbers of first-generation students, and student diversity and belonging cultural centers.

Taylor Farms Pledges $2 Million to Support New Plant Sciences Complex

Taylor Farms, a family-owned, Salinas-based company and a leading producer of salads and healthy fresh foods, has pledged $2 million to the College of Agriculture, Food and Environmental Sciences' new Plant Sciences Complex. The gift will help fund the new George Wurzel Plant Sciences Building, the teaching and research hub of the complex. Slated to open in late 2025, the project will bring together multiple disciplines under one roof to tackle California's most pressing food and agriculture challenges.
