Study Suggests Rattlesnake Livestreams Can Improve Public Perception of ‘Maligned’ Species

The installation of livestream cameras across the U.S. capturing real-time rattlesnake behavior has resulted in mass viewership, public education and improved perceptions of a vilified viper, according to a study by Project RattleCam, a collaboration between scientists from Cal Poly and Dickinson College in Pennsylvania. Led by Cal Poly biological sciences professor Emily Taylor, Project RattleCam first captured rattlesnake behavior in 2021 with a livestream in California. There is another RattleCam in Colorado, and a third is planned for launch in Pennsylvania in 2026. Project RattleCam has reached over 21,300 subscribers and more than 4.4 million views on YouTube.

Deloitte’s Mekena McGrew to keynote Cal Poly’s AI Convening Nov. 6

Cal Poly will welcome Mekena McGrew — quantum information lead at Deloitte and member of the Noyce School of Applied Computing Advisory Board — as keynote speaker for the AI Convening on Thursday, Nov. 6, in the Advanced Technology Laboratories (ATL). McGrew will speak on AI and business transformation from 2:45 to 3:45 p.m. The convening also features panel discussions with Cal Poly faculty and staff on applied and responsible uses of AI. The keynote and all panels will be livestreamed and recorded for later viewing.

Seeking Faculty Lead: Quantitative Reasoning Core Competency Assessment

The Office of Academic Programs and Planning (APP) is seeking a faculty lead for the Quantitative Reasoning (QR) Core Competency assessment. Working with APP, the Academic Assessment Council and faculty, the lead will coordinate campuswide QR assessment planning, organization and documentation. The role includes four units of assigned time in academic year 2025-26, with an estimated six hours per week during winter and spring quarters and possible renewal for 2026-27. Those interested should submit a CV, statement of interest and department chair or head confirmation by Nov. 21 to Jean Lee at jlee473@calpoly.edu.

Attend the Academic Calendar Open Forum

The CAP 211 (Academic Calendar) Task Force, convened by the Provost’s Office, is reviewing Cal Poly’s process for developing and approving the university’s academic calendar. The group will host a campus forum on Wednesday, Nov. 13, from 11 a.m. to noon in Building 180, Room 102, to share preliminary findings and invite feedback on proposed criteria to ensure the calendar supports student success, equity and operational sustainability. Input from the forum will help shape the task force’s recommendation to the president and provost on a revised CAP 211 policy.
